HE WAS MISLED.

Her Description was Gleaming, But the Words Came Cheap.

The picturesqueness is always a feature of a woman's description, and if you hear her describe a table-cloth you fancy it's a gorgeous thing of tapestry or some equally effective picture.

"My wife," says the husband to the man in the store, "she sent me something she had lost at yesterday."

"Yes," he says.

"This is the description of it," and he pulls out a piece of paper which he has written on, setting out a series of pattern and myriad of colors, and all in nomenclature that sounds like some elaborate picture. "I can't tell you what it is," he says.

"That's all right, I know what the means."

"You'll please wrap it up very carefully, for if it gets spoilt before it goes here she'll be mad."

"Certainly."

Then the man goes to a shelf and pulls out another piece of something.

"Hold on," says the husband, "that can't be the thing. That's chintz, or damask or something."

"This is the article, sir."

"What does it cost?"

"Forty cents a yard."

"I thought from the description it would come to about $100."

The Tallyrand-Stevens Wedding.

(Paris Letter to London Truth.)

It was certain, from the day that the divorce law was passed, that the Duke de Tallyrand and his ex-wife would be turned into a divorce, and that he would marry Mrs. Stevens, who is the most eligible American lady in Paris.

Amidst the general right in Paris, the wedding has taken place, and the happy couple have been blessed by an American Episcopal minister, the Rev. Mr. Edward C. St. John, who has been able to obtain a dispensation from the ecclesiastical law.

The wife, however, has no right to bear the husband's name after the divorce, and she must, therefore, change her business name in any case drop it. The fortune of the new Duchess de Dino is estimated at $600,000.
